WHEELING, W. VA., OCTOBER 30, 1885.

The Irish Volunteers.

In the late Presidential campaign when Irish-Americans were coming over by the thousands it was said that they were coming to vote for Blaine and after that would drop away, being naturally Democrats. It is doubtless true that Mr. Blaine, a big-hearted, chivalrous man, had a special attraction for big-hearted, chivalrous Irish. Beyond this Mr. Blaine stood for principles in which our Irish fellow citizens have come more and more to believe. He embodied in his perfect form the idea of protection to home industries—an idea which attracts the intelligent Irishman as he realizes more fully that the influence which has crushed the industries of Ireland is the same that lobbies in Congress, by free trade pamphlets endeavoring to control public opinion, and by every art of a rich, powerful and crafty nation which seeks to break down the growing industries of the United States. This issue was never so clearly presented as in the late campaign. Americans of all classes never before so well understood that their bread and butter are on the side of the protective policy.

The Irishmen who came over in 1884 are with us in 1885. This is the common testimony, and there are growing evidences that they have come to stay. They showed this in Ohio. They are showing it in the most pronounced way in New York. They have seen that they were met upon the common level of American citizenship, and they have been made to feel this at home. They know that in the R. publican party there is no discrimination on account of race, religion or condition. At last they realize that the Republican party is animated by the real democratic spirit.

In New York Irish Americans are holding enthusiastic meetings in favor of the Republican ticket, which has no more zealous and hard-working supporters. In West Virginia last year we saw something of the fervor of the Irish volunteers, who never tired of their work nor found any service too arduous for them. They were denounced and jeered, but by torchlight and by daylight they kept their place in the ranks, bearing upon their hearts the harp of Erin and the portraits of Blaine and Logan. Though they fought on the losing side they have lost none of the honest conviction which brought them over to the National party which means to protect all Americans against the labor of all foreign lands.

The Irish who are with us have come to stay, and more are coming. Already they have got so thick in the Republican party that the opposition cannot well boot at them without hooting at the whole procession.

Crime and Punishment.
The light punishment that has been frequently inflicted by courts for very grave crimes and vice versa has caused time and time again the severe condemnation of the jury by the indignant people. The comments may have been just, but seen from the character of the criminal another phase presents itself. Take, for example, the sentences of Fish and Ward. Suppose a hardened criminal, or a man of low instincts and debased tastes, had committed a crime not so heinous as that charged to the bank wreckers, and that he was given twenty years in the State prison, just twice as long as the enforced retirement of Fish and Ward.

The people would naturally look at this as a partial dealing of justice; but is not the punishment of Ward and Fish greater? The hardened criminal is not compelled to give up the luxuries of life; he may fare better in prison than he did in his former life. His associations have been of the lowest order and his companions of the most desperate character, and a troubled conscience and wounded pride are not his companions in the cell. The ten years of Ward are a cycle of remorse. Here was a man surrounded by a host of influential friends, trusted by the most honored man in the country, possessed of means that could command every luxury and indulge any fancy. The crash comes. Friends desert him, comforts are denied him; the coarse convict garb takes the place of the soft broadcloth and the gloomy, contracted cell opens and the doors of the elegantly furnished drawing room shut on his former life. Despair and remorse will be his constant companions, his tormentors by day and his disturbing dreams by night. Between the two the hardened criminal is to be considered as receiving the lighter punishment.

THE NYMPH OF THE NIAGARA.
A Cute Little Cuckoo-shill That Is Well Named the Nymph.

There is a very peculiar craft plying the waters of Niagara River; too large for a plaything, too small to be a competitor in either freight or passenger traffic, it serves only as a pleasure yacht to its owner, General James C. Strong, of this city. It is named the Nymph and is an object of curiosity on account of its novel motive power. It was the privilege of an Express reporter yesterday to be one of a small party to take a cruise on the Nymph to the Oak Island Club house at Grand Island and return. The entire machinery, engine, boiler and all takes up less room than an ordinary cooking stove and resembles it in fact as well as appearance. It is nothing more nor less than an oil stove, which propels a steam engine of twelve horse power. The originality of the invention is the automatic adjustment to the feed, which makes the employment to a "stoker" unnecessary. Two jets of steam connect with the two outlet pipes of a four gallon tank of oil, after the manner of a blowpipe, and blow the oil through horizontal cast-iron pipes into the fire box, which is a very shallow. As the oil, thus atomized, passes into the fire box it feels the flame, and steam is generated. When the steam pressure reaches a certain high, indicated by the steam gauge, a diaphragm acts automatically on the steam current, reducing its force, and consequently, diminishing the quantity of fuel. So, too, when the steam pressure lowers the automatic diaphragm opens up the valve and more fuel is added. By this "governor" the pressure is kept uniform. When the match is once applied the engine controls itself, and the engineer duty is thus comparatively a light one. The boat runs at a speed of ten miles an hour, and one gallon of oil suffices for that length of time. The engine is thus economical as well as trustworthy. A boy can run the boat, so simple is its mechanism, and the cheapness of the engine, together with its freedom of dust, cinders, smoke, and danger of explosions, will no doubt make it popular in yachts designed, like the Nymph, for pleasure and recreation rather than for great carrying capacity. The Nymph's owner is exceedingly proud of his possession and takes much pleasure in her. The boat is twenty-five feet long with a five foot beam, and will comfortably carry a party of ten or twelve; since it was launched, about three weeks ago, there has hardly been a day but that it has been in service.

WHAT IT COSTS TO DIE.

The High Cost of Leaving the World in a Respectable Fashion in New York.

The cost of cremation by the new company in this city, it is said, will be only $25. The fact that a person dying in New York can have suitable mortuary rites performed for the comparatively small sum of $25 is most interesting, and will, we feel sure, do much to rob death of its terror. Dying in New York is a luxury, and one about which most people show a strange amount of thoughtfulness and inconsideration. A citizen can live three years in Arkansas for the price of a conventionally respectable interment in New York. Yet few take such a fact into the slightest consideration in consenting to a demise. We are, indeed, acquainted with one conscientious old Irish woman, with a complication of diseases, who faithfully attends the Dispensary, because she is "on her relations," and she knows and admits that she can not afford to bury her.

Such a spirit deserves a historical record and wide emulation. The fact is, we are much in need of a society for the cultivation, not of plain living, but of plain dying. In these hard times it is often less than criminal that a man subject his estate to the profligate, or adopt the extravagant funeral. We have heard of a gentleman who, at the solicitation of his wife, gave up tobacco and thereby, in the next fifteen years, saved over $500, which all went at last for his burial expenses. He was certainly a disproporportion between effort and its results most painful to well-balanced minds, and every disinclination to the anti-tobacco propaganda.

How to Administer Medicine to Swine.

American Agriculturist.
If the medicine can not be given in his food, as when he has no appetite, or is in great pain, it must be administered directly. To do this in quite difficult, and most farmers give up, or adopt the Homoeopathic treatment, because it is so much easier. When properly managed, it is not very hard either for the pig or the attendant. The pig is caught by a slip-noose in a strong rope, which is fastened through the mouth, and held back of the tusk. He will pull back with all his might, and the rope must be made fast quite short, to the top of a post or a fence. Then his legs are secured so that he can not spring forward. If he should with a hole in the toe is given to him to chew upon, he will clamp away upon it as angrily as possible, and the medicine can be poured in his mouth through it—a little at a time, or he will choke, and strangle, and cough. Another way is to hold the pig in some way, or as for ringing, and to pour the medicine into one nostril, through an oil can, such as is used for oiling machinery. Either of these methods render it possible to give medicine to a pig as effectively as to any animal, and it is not probable that his rage will have any evil effect, as in the case of a struggling child.

The Unbelievable Press.

Windsor (Mts.) Correspondent.
A yellow-backed pig named Jim Cummings, who works for Sam Hardacre, near Millville, came to town last Saturday, and while drunk at Creswell's grocery made some remarks about ourselves as we were passing up street with our youngest daughter. He was wound because we turned him over two weeks ago and his crowd that took the lynchings out of old man Parson's buggy at the Goose Creek meeting. When he spoke his insulting froth Hanbury Davis took it in a row which followed he struck the gorilla a rubber-binder in the jaw which knocked him out from between his wool suspenders and loosened six of his teeth. He had Davis arrested by Marshal Billings, and the Mayor levied a fine of $10, which was paid for him as soon as we learned the facts. We intend to show up the whisky yahoos from the Goose Creek neighborhood who try to run this town on Saturdays; and, by the way, Han Davis is a candidate for Town Marshal. He is a man for that job.

Slavery in Free Switzerland.

London Times.
They do queer things in Switzerland, considering that the Swiss enjoy their country as "the land of liberty." The children of poor people are regularly hired by auction in most of the cantons. There was the most painful scene recently in the market place of Bell, a town near Bern, where, in spite of the heartrending hardship that befalls the unhappy, here four young children, ranging from two to ten, were "placed" out for a year to the highest bidder by the cry; the family being thus broken up and separated for fear lest the woman should be compelled to seek assistance from the town. This is really very nearly as bad as the old slave sales in America; and I should doubt whether there is any other country in Europe where such an infamous system exists at the present time. The Swiss, in reality, are a cordial, unhesitating race.

A Household Necessity.

New Orleans Picayune.
An exceedingly sprightly maiden lady became in a private letter the numerous hardships that befall the unhappy, here four young children, ranging from two to ten, were "placed" out for a year to the highest bidder by the cry; the family being thus broken up and separated for fear lest the woman should be compelled to seek assistance from the town. This is really very nearly as bad as the old slave sales in America; and I should doubt whether there is any other country in Europe where such an infamous system exists at the present time. The Swiss, in reality, are a cordial, unhesitating race.

A Little Polestar.
Here is a sample case from the Hamilton county election returns, which tells the story without any explanation. In precinct A, Fourth ward, the registration was 720 votes—96 more than the entire Presidential vote of 1884, and the vote October 13, 1885, was 960, or 270 more than the registration, and 372 more than were cast at the Presidential election.

Now take the October vote:
Howdy's vote was 926
Forsaker's vote was 42
Total 968

It was counted just so by Clerk Dalton—giving Howdy 434 more votes than Cleveland got, and Forsaker 130 less than Blaine.

How can Mrs. Smith wear such a handsome velvet coat? "My dear child, don't you know her husband saves doctors' bills by using Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup for the children."
